STRIKING A BALANCE ....

“Our biggest challenge is to keep our identity and our national spirit in a very globalised world – speak English, sing English songs, browse the internet, travel the world, but home is Singapore. That’s something we have to do a lot of work to maintain and that’s one of the reasons why we celebrate National Day the way we do.”

-- Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong

“Showing you care for Singapore goes beyond the nationalistic pomp and pageantry of National Day. It is also about recognizing that modernization inevitably costs us important parts of our heritage.”

-- Tessa Wong, Journalist

STRIKING A BALANCE

We are in danger if we go along with the tide because year by year, every five years, every ten years, the Chinese tide rises….My advice is to stay on course. China may be the greatest power in the world. The Chinese language may be one of the world’s leading languages. We stay where we are – bilingual, working language English, everybody level playing field. Or be prepared for big trouble. See where we have got, see the stability, the tolerance, the way you are able to retain your identity as a Chinese, but as a Singapore Chinese, or a Chinese Singaporean. … Our circumstances do not allow us to let one language or culture assume an advantage over the others.

--Lee Kuan Yew in the Straits Times, 1 January 1997
